

Job Interview Advice: How to Beat a Bad One

Signs of a Bad Job Interview

When the interviewer...

When the interview itself...

1 Stay positive

Stay optimistic throughout the interview. Sometimes, the interviewer goes through a busy day or faces a problem; then, again, keeping a positive stance can help you turn around a bad job interview.

2 Ask insightful questions

If your prospective hiring manager is asking you dull questions, be the one to spark up the interview with upbeat ones. Maybe, you can ask them about their expectations and company culture to perk up the time.

3 Prepare to change your tactic

So, if they're becoming bored with you discussing your long-list of achievements, change your tactic right away by sharing how you chose your career path or former jobs. In addition, discussing relatable (and related) matters with the interviewer may help break the ice.

4 Send them a fine thank you letter

Just because you suffered a bad job interview doesn't mean you'll leave that impression ruined. In your thank-you letter, express your enthusiasm for the job and willingness to see them again and share your ideas. Besides, close it by wishing them the best.

Sources:

workpolis.com | workitdaily.com | Business Insider | Monster Worldwide

FOR MORE INFORMATION, PLEASE VISIT OUR WEBSITE AT

 resumeprime